YOUTH FOR SUSTAINABLE PEACE

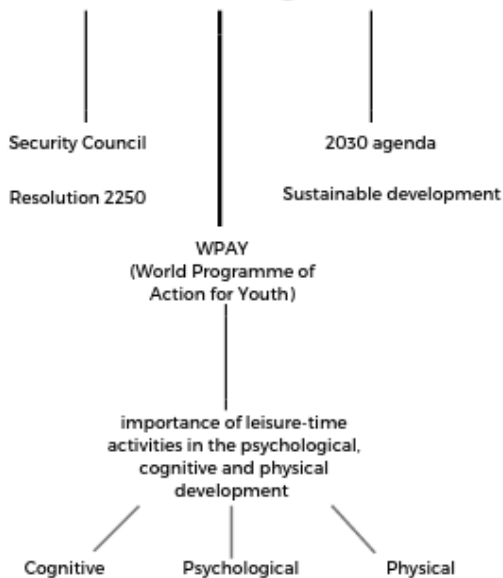

We are facing the largest generation of youth the world has ever seen.

There are 1.2 billion young people aged 15 to 24 years, accounting for 17 per cent of the global population, accounting for 1 out of every 6 people worldwide. This is predicted to increase to 1 out of every 4 people, which means there would be 1.3 billion youth by 2030 – the target date for the sustainable development goals.

Still, young people often represent the majority of the population in fragile and conflict affected countries.

Recognizing young people as critical agents

Whether young people influence a peace or prevention process from inside the room at negotiating tables, or from the outside with the use of mass protest or social media, ensuring that the youth participates in a comprehensive and substantial manner is imperative for the prevention of violence and the achievement of sustaining peace. Their contribution is undeniably necessary.

Impact and contribution of youth in peace processes

Social trust

Social cohesion

Social reconciliation

Despite these wide recognitions, young women and men continue to be marginalized, undervalued and insufficiently recognized for their capacity to build and sustain peace.

It's clear that prevention matters, that is why we must search and support ways in which we can create the conditions for young people to progress and play an increasingly active role in the international community. Music is one of the many catalysts that helps young people encounter opportunities to express their individuality and, in many cases, flee violent and oppressive environments.

Music serves to connect young people, for solidarity to engage in quality education and develop opportunities to participate in peace processes. It also serves as an instrument for building social cohesion and greater tolerance among the communities.

Gustavo Rivero Weber Conductor

Gustavo Rivero Weber, founder of the Orquesta Juvenil Universitaria Eduardo Mata and its artistic director since 2015, has taken the group in short time to be one of the best orchestras in Mexico, with international recognition after a very successful Italian tour where they played in such festivals as the Meraner Musikwochen and the Emilia Romagna Festival among others. A graduate in piano from the Curtis Institute of Music of Philadelphia, as a pupil of the great pianist Jorge Bolet, and of Ludmila Guinsburg in Odessa State Conservatory in Ukraine, he then took conducting as his main activity having worked conducting technique with Maestros such as Avi Ostrowski, Jan Latham-Koenig and Alun Francis.

He makes his debut for Naxos with a selection of music from some
